

LIFEGROUPS

COMMON QUESTIONS

What happens at a River Valley Lifegroup?

You've probably seen a typical Lifegroup meeting and not even realized it. A Lifegroup looks like friends at lunch, teams playing basketball, or people studying a book or topic of interest. At its core, a Lifegroup is a small gathering of people, and it is less about what you do and more about who you do it with. By participating in Lifegroups, you can expect to make connections, grow in faith, and make a difference.

How often does a Lifegroup meet?

Our Lifegroups meet for three seasons a year—Winter, Summer and Fall. During a season, most groups meet once a week. Lifegroups are meant to bring meaning and community into the flow of your life, so even if you can't attend every meeting, there is still great value in joining a group.

How long does a typical Lifegroup stay together?

Most Lifegroups meet for a season. This way, new people can join groups easily and regularly. Also, the seasons approach allows you to try multiple groups each year. As relationships form, some groups choose to stay together for consecutive seasons, but new members are always welcome.

Is there childcare available?

Childcare varies from group to group. When you search our Locator for a Lifegroup, the group profile will indicate if childcare is available.

What if I don't like the first Lifegroup I try?

The truth is, not everyone will find the best fit with the first Lifegroup they try. This is why we encourage you to select a few groups that interest you, contact the leaders and try out a couple different options before choosing the best one for you. The simple strategy to finding success in Lifegroups is to not give up. We believe there is a group that is right for everyone—including you!
